Easter Sunday at St Johns:

Steve, The Lambs are all Crying - Steve Shakespeare

So, its 5 am on Easter Sunday suddenly, our idea to host a Service of the Light gathering at St Johns doesn't seem a good one. I'd been trusted by the Caretaker, Lesley, with the Village Hall key to open up for the arrival, of Ruth and Steve who had kindly agreed to make and serve the Bacon Butties after the Service. To the glorious sound of birdsong all around and the chickens and cockerel at Home Farm in fine voice, I opened the Village Hall and managed to fix open the temperamental electric security gate, leading up to the church. Greg would soon arrive with his 'fire pit', and the plan was the fire would be prepared, lit, and coaxed for half an hour before the start of the Service so that at a particular point the new Paschal Candle (borne by Kim, with 2 lambs in procession) could be ignited and placed in Church ready for the 9.30 Communion Service.

The Cavalry in the shape of Ruth and Steve with their Hot Plate arrived early, so with the Water Boiler duly turned on for the teas and coffees later, I went to see that Greg was OK. I was impressed with the pile of comestibles I left on the worktop, despite the 2 large catering packs of back bacon procured by Sarah Orr being missing. Apparently, they had been left the day before in a fridge on a canal boat at its mooring somewhere near Birmingham and there they had remained. I have long since stopped asking Sarah to explain things as I always get lost and its probably best not to know anyway. However, a quick trip to Tesco yesterday afternoon by Sarah saw us with enough bacon to feed an army. I had managed to get every combination of bread (seeded bap, soft bap, gluten free baps,) and bacon (back, smoked, unsmoked, vegetarian sausage, Lincolnshire meat free sausage and Rosemary and herb meat free sausage). Hopefully all tastes would be catered for. Sadly, I left a kilogram of spreadable salted butter in my fridge!!!

Up at the church the fire pit was well alight, looking like one of those coastal beacons they light from time to time, and I could see from the look on Greg's smoke smudged face the Service of the Light Risk Assessment was at the forefront of his mind and being strictly adhered to. The Paschal Candle with its pins drilled into place was in the safekeeping of Kim Abbott, who half an hour previous had been in floods of tears as she was convinced that amongst the 250 sheep in the field opposite all the newly born lambs had lost their mothers as they were running round crying. I eventually convinced her they were frolicking, gambolling, and bleating not crying as that's what lambs did. That they were more than happy, they were ecstatic, and would remain that way as long as Greg managed to keep his now impressive bonfire under control. I also advised her in the interest of not being saddened later down the line, it really was not a good idea to give them all names.

After the placing of the lit Paschal candle in Church everyone gathered at the Village Hall, where Ruth, in total command, made sure everyone was fed with their dietary requirement, and others were dispensing teas and coffees to all who asked. There were about 20 folk that took the time and trouble to come and spend a little time with us at St Johns for the Service of the Light and then stay on for bacon sandwiches. We were delighted to see so many, and we hope they all felt it was a good place to spend an early Easter Sunday morning. There was a further good attendance at the 9.30 Communion Service with Revd. Richard Ford, and afterwards the indefatigable Kim and Greg had organised an Egg hunt for the dozen or so children that came to take part. It was a great sight to see Kids flying about running round the church outside with buckets supplied by Kim trying to fill them with a maximum of six chocolate eggs. Its no mean feat trying to tell a seven-year-old that 'six is enough', its nigh on impossible. The by now famous Kim Abbot motto of 'be prepared for all eventualities by overbuying' made sure every child went home with a bucket or carrier bag, rammed full of small eggs, plus a large egg each. We would estimate each participant took home about half their bodyweight in chocolate!!

I've said before we are very lucky to live where we do and see God's creation and new life at first hand. So, for those who came to spend time with us from 6.00am a load more lambs were brought into the world. New life means exactly that here.

Special thanks to Ruth and Steve, Sarah, Ricky, Mildred, Lesley, Kim, Greg and Pete and anyone else who helped in the organisation of this event and took the time to spend with us.
